Mayer Malbin

Family Ties

Founded by Mayer Malbin, the man after whom the company is named, his original shop was the typical hardware store of its day. Joseph Selden went to work for Mayer Malbin more than three-quarters of a century ago, eventually buying the company from his boss in 1946. A few years later, Joseph's son-in-law, Bob Gordon, joined the business and began transforming Mayer Malbin from a plumbing store into an industrial supply distribution center with a larger focus. Soon thereafter, Joseph's son, Irwin Selden, brought his engineering experience on board, expanding the company's range of specialty work.

The family presence at Mayer Malbin continues to grow to this day. Bob's sons, Dan and Jon Gordon, and Irwin's son and son-in-law, Mark Selden and Edmund Jalbert, have all worked at Mayer Malbin for the past 30 years. Now a fourth generation has joined the family business—Sam Gordon, the son of Dan, previously spent a few years practicing law; and Jason Gordon, the son of Jon has recently joined the ranks after many years as a computer software engineer.

This tight-knit crew is committed to making Mayer Malbin the best value for its customers. Our family-style, hands-on management approach allows Mayer Malbin to quickly react to change — something which eludes our big box competitors.

The Management: Sam, Dan, Jon, Bob, Marc, and Ed

Selection & Availability

Centrally located in Long Island City, New York, Mayer Malbin is the one-stop shopping center for our industry. We boast six buildings with a combined 100,000-square-feet where our entire inventory is stored indoors.

At Mayer Malbin, we stock the largest inventory of pipe, valves, fittings, and industrial specialty items in the Northeast. We also realize that our clients often need uncommon parts and supplies, or that sometimes our clients need large quantities of certain items. Therefore we keep a wide selection and large quantities on hand.
